Weather Report: Jon Trumbull sent this in for a current rain total here at Atascadero Lake.

Summary:

This month is good, so far, an inch beyond average, with 2 weeks to go; unfortunately, we have another dry ridge setting up, and the outlook is not good for the rest of March. Because we've never had a truly big "Miracle April," we should expect to accrue not much over 2-3 inches, and May could be less, if the series of ridges blocks El Nino as it often has this winter. So, not so good, compared to the huge El Nino buildup. Good news: Our total 17.64" is on track to reach slightly over 20 inches, which is getting close to the lake average of 22 inches. And we now know that 22 inches with the help of the creek fill line gets the lake up pretty well, if not really full. But unless March through May turn around the dry pattern and run us over the spillway till June, we should be prepared to add supplemental well water as early as July.

Respectfully Submitted Nancy Hair, Secretary
